

was the one time that they could find to get out of the house." Admittedly, as we get older and our weekends get taken over by tasks like schlepping kids to dance class, cleaning, getting groceries and finishing up a work proposal, it's hard to muster the energy to leave the house on a Saturday night. Brunch has become the most convenient time to connect with friends instead of huddling yet again for Tuesday-night drinks. (I know I'm way less likely to pull the plug on a weekend daytime hang as opposed to a weeknight, when all I want to do is go home and catch
